Debora LaTorre ‘11
A former Army medic and recent Bloomfield College nursing graduate, Debora LaTorre hopes to become an Army officer in the Nurses Corps. Debora had a clear path planned out with her career as a nurse as the focal point. After duty at combat support hospitals in Afghanistan, Debora made the transition from military to civilian life by discovering the comprehensive BSN program at Bloomfield College. “I am an advocate for the patient and required to use critical thinking in my learning,” she explains. “As a student, I found out more about why we employed certain methods in the field. The clinical staff at Bloomfield are outstanding.” The Army paid for Debora’s education through the 9/11 GI Bill and she was a Yellow Ribbon recipient at Bloomfield College.

Jefferson Matos
Two deployments in Iraq with the Marine Corps helped Jefferson Matos find the discipline and determination to focus on his education. During his last year in the Marines, Jefferson investigated the various funding sources available to veterans and secured funding through the Post 9/11 GI Bill. Because he did his homework well ahead of time, Jefferson started college as a database administration major one month after discharge from the Marines. “I wanted the best of both networking and programming, and I knew I wanted to go to Bloomfield College.” Jefferson will graduate from Bloomfield College without any debt due to his military benefits and the Yellow Ribbon Program. His future aspirations are to work for either the department of veteran affairs or a private technology company.
